

Zero Waste Institute

March 2010 Newsletter

This month we go for a more light hearted newsletter than we normally publish. This will be a song about reuse. Reuse of rags to be specific. This song is called Pineapple Rag. It was written by Bob Blue who taught school for many years in Wellesley Massachusetts and died in 2006 from complications of multiple sclerosis. Along the way he wrote amusing, entertaining and serious songs, essays and poems. He gave informal performances in his home to adoring audiences from the community.

In this clip, he explains the connection between his song and Scott Joplin's piano rag of the same name. The reuse promo comes at the end.

I hope you like it.

Copy the URL below into your browser,

http://www.bobblue.org/music/Pineapple_rag.mp3

If you are viewing this in Adobe Acrobat, rather than the free Adobe Reader, select the icon on the toolbar for selecting text which is a T with a little dotted square beneath it. Then you can copy the above link.

Paul Palmer

zwi@sonic.net

<http://www.zerowasteinstitute.org>

Sebastopol CA

Do you know anyone who should be getting this newsletter. Send me their email address to add to the distribution list.